"Beat me, and lock you up in you edroom," Dick answered, without hesitation. "Have you got the cartridges?" "Yes; they're in my pocket, but they are joggling horribly. Do pin fire cart-ridges go off of their own accord?" "Don't know. Take the revolver, if you are afraid, and let me carry them."

"I'm not afraid." Maisie strode forward swiftly, a hand in her pocket and her chin in the air. Dick followed with small pin-fire revolver. The children had discovered that a small pin-lire revolver.

The children had discovered that their lives would be unendurable without pistol practice. After much forethought and self-denial, Dick had saved seven shillings and sixpence, the price of a badly constructed Belgian revolver. Maisie could only contribute half a crown to the syndicate for the purchase of a hundred cartridges. "You can save better than I can, Dick," she explained: "I like nice things to eat, and in doesn't matter to you. Besides, boys ought to do these things."

Dick grumbled a little at the arrangement, but went out and made the purchases, which the children were then on their way to test. Revolvers did not lie in the acheme of their daily life as decreed for them by the guardian who was incorrectly supposed to stand in the place of a mother to these two orphans. Dick had been under her care for six years, during which time she had made ner profits of the allowances supposed to be expended on clothes, and, partly through thoughtlessness, partly through a natural desire to pain,—she was a widow of some years and anxious to marry again,—had made his days burdensome on his young shoulders. Where he had looked for love, she gave him first aversion and then hate. Where he growing older had sought a little sympathy, she gave him ridicule. The many hours she could spare from the ordering of her small house she devoted to what she called the home training of Dick Heldar. Her religion, manufacfactured in the main by her own intelligence and an ardent study of the Scriptures, was an aid to her in this matter. At such times as she herself was not personally displeased with Dick, she left him to understand that he had a heavy account to settle with his Greator: the Legislature very much their own sway anyhow, perhaps they will not go to the trouble to throw him out.

Now begins the scramble for the Speakership of the next House. In this connection comes the remarkable suggestion of Dan Lockwood, a Cleveland fugleman of New York, just elected to Congress. This would be rough on least unnecessary fib, and nover hesitations.

Before the McKinley passed there were loud protests on the other side of the Atlantic—newspaper articles, public indignation meetings. After the passage of the bill there was heated denunciation from the same sources. Since the Democratic triumph at the polls the cable brings tidings of great rejoicings. The autumn of one year brought him a companion in bondege, a long-haired, gray-eyed little atom, as self-contained as himself, who moved about the house silently and for the first few weeks spoke only to the goat that was her chiefeat friend on earth and lived in the back-garden. Mrs. Jennett objected to the goat on the grounds that he was un-Christian—which he certainly was. "Then," said the atom, choosing her words very deliberately, "I shall write to my inwer-peoples and tell them that you are a very bad woman. Amomma is mine, mine, mine!" CHICAGO, Nov. 7 .- Dr. J. C. McPher son, of Lyons, N. J., one of the best known physicians in that section of the State, was assaulted last night by two men on Eighteenth street. The doctor is visiting friends on Calmut avenue. Last evening he left his friends' house to call on a gentleman near Indiana avenue. Not being well acquainted with the streets he saked two men whom he met where Eighteenth street was. One of the men in reply shoved a revolver in the doctor's face, and pulled the trigger. It failed to discharge. The doctor struck the fellow a blow in the face which sent him sprawling. He then broke his umbrella over the other follow's head. Both assailants came at him again, and the one who had the revolver struck the doctor a territic blow in the face and the blood poured in a torrent from the wound. He wasstruck twice mere in the forehead and knocked down. His cries for help were heard a few minutes later by an officer. He was a machinery.

The buttons of his big coat were tipped off by the footpads, but they evidently were frightened away, as they at did not take his watch or purse containing nearly $100. is visiting friends on Calmut avenue
